THIS IS YOUR LUXURY MARKET REPORT

MAP OF LUXURY RESIDENTIAL MARKETS

Welcome to the Luxury Market Report, your guide to luxury real estate market data and trends for North America. Produced monthly by The Institute for Luxury Home Marketing, this report provides an in-depth look at the top residential markets across the United States and Canada. Within the individual markets, you will find established luxury benchmark prices and detailed survey of luxury active and sold properties designed to showcase current market status and recent trends. The national report illustrates a compilation of the top North American markets to review overall standards and trends.

- LUXURY REPORT EXPLAINED -

The Institute for Luxury Home Marketing has analyzed a number of metrics — including sales prices, sales volumes, number of sales, sales-price-to-list-price ratios, days on market and price-per-square-foot – to provide you a comprehensive North American Luxury Market report.

Additionally, we have further examined all of the individual luxury markets to provide both an overview and an in-depth analysis – including, where data is sufficient, a breakdown by luxury single-family homes and luxury attached homes.

It is our intention to include additional luxury markets on a continual basis. If your market is not featured, please contact us so we can implement the necessary qualification process. More in-depth reports on the luxury communities in your market are available as well.

Looking through this report, you will notice three distinct market statuses, Buyer's Market, Seller's Market, and Balanced Market. A Buyer's Market indicates that buyers have greater control over the price point. This market type is demonstrated by a substantial number of homes on the market and few sales, suggesting demand for residential properties is slow for that market and/or price point.

By contrast, a Seller's Market gives sellers greater control over the price point. Typically, this means there are few homes on the market and a generous demand, causing competition between buyers who ultimately drive sales prices higher.

A Balanced Market indicates that neither the buyers nor the sellers control the price point at which that property will sell and that there is neither a glut nor a lack of inventory. Typically, this type of market sees a stabilization of both the list and sold price, the length of time the property is on the market as well as the expectancy amongst homeowners in their respective communities – so long as their home is priced in accordance with the current market value.

NORTH AMERICAN LUXURY REVIEW

The Changing Face of Luxury

Exactly one year ago, we reported that demand for large properties, mega mansions, private estates, and luxury ranches had reduced significantly over the previous few years; especially from the younger generation of luxury property buyers.

The demand shift was not so much about price, but rather the result of the affluent changing their lifestyle preferences and assessing the value they could obtain for their money. These larger properties were viewed as too labor-intensive and expensive to run and manage.

Last year, many home purchase decisions were based on the experience and amenities that a property could afford its owner. From condos to private homes, the inclusive requirement of community, resort-style amenities were very much in vogue – including services such as concierge, wellness facilities, housekeeping, spa amenities, and walking proximity to nightlife.

Equally, there was a growing trend for the wealthy to diversify and purchase not one, but several smaller residences in various locations, nationally and globally, to further enhance their need for unparalleled lifestyle experiences. This also explains why luxury buyers were downsizing and prioritizing quality over space.

One year later, and the not only have we seen a major swing in demand for these larger properties, but also a significant change in the preferences and lifestyle requirements of the affluent. COVID-19 has had a major impact on everyone's lives, not just in terms of its potential health concerns, but from restrictions in the way we travel, socialize and work, to where and the types of homes in which we live.

The pandemic's effect on the luxury real estate market has been contrary to all initial predictions of an impending global recession. Even during the first couple of months, when the industry 'paused,' overall there was very little impact on the value of properties. In fact, the last 6 months has seen a resurgence in buying luxury properties especially if they offer established indoor and outdoor spaces, home offices, and private wellness amenities such as gyms, swimming pools, yoga studios, and recreation rooms.

Our report indicates that the median sale price for luxury homes rose 2.9% year over year during the last three months, June – August 2020. In a recent report by Redfin they believe that luxury real estate prices may continue to strengthen further into the third quarter, as the affluent continue to see large investment returns from the currently strong stock market.

Coupled with the low interest rates, the policies granting (and insisting) on working from home implemented by many employers, and the concerns of the pandemic, all translate to the affluent increasingly leaving trading in their city lifestyle for a home that has it all.

According to Redfin, New York, NY, and San Francisco, CA were the top two metros with the most people looking to leave for another metro in the second quarter of 2020, while places including Phoenix, AZ and Miami, FL were among the most popular destinations.

Equally popular are less urban areas; with many escaping to the countryside, lake country, mountain resorts and beach communities. Previously, many of these destinations were considered to be second home markets, but now for many they have become their primary residence.

These second home markets span the gamut with new communities such as Truckee, CA and Coeur d'Alene, ID seeing an upsurge in new buyers and existing luxury destinations such as Vail and Aspen in Colorado, The Hamptons, NY and Boca Raton, FL seeing current homeowners deciding to relocate indefinitely.

A term seeing traction in the journalist community is “Zoom towns” which describes markets that are booming due to these homeowners being able to work remotely. Many of the new Zoom towns are seeing an increase in popularity. Not only do they offer the space, privacy, and outdoor lifestyle that these affluent buyers now crave, but also properties with lower price points; in other words, value for money that simply cannot be matched by buyers looking in major metropolitan cities.

As affluent millennials are starting to consider the prospect of buying a home, especially those in their 30's who are still employed, the pandemic has focused their preferences from purchasing in hip urban districts in expensive cities to looking at more affordable suburban or less expensive rural communities. Redfin's recent report shows more home searches and higher price increases in both these housing markets.

According to Wealth-X, in the 15 years prior to 2020 the world's wealthy has grown in size continuously with the number of global millionaires (those with $1m+ in net worth) doubling to more than 25 million.

As wealth has grown, so too has the world of luxury and its accessibility. Bain & Company's research shows that the wealth of the affluent has expanded from €147bn in 2005 to €1.3trn in 2019.¹ In turn, this has led to an increase in the number of services and products being offered to this more diverse range of consumers.

Similar to the real estate market, the luxury industry in general was also halted by the pandemic initially, but differs in so much that many of its players are still facing large challenges, and now having to transform their methods of delivery in order to meet demands. As Wealth-X explains in their “Wealth-X Global Luxury Outlook 2020 Report,” the wealthy have continued to spend on luxury during 2020 although differently, so innovative suppliers have been finding ways to offer their services directly into the home.

“Restaurants are offering dine-at-home options and companies are providing home delivery of ingredients for the wealthy’s private chefs to use. Real estate agents are seeing demand spiral for high-end properties that are closer to nature and offer security and safety. Auction houses have pivoted towards online auctions and are reporting robust demand.² Interest has grown in securing additional passports for, or residency of, countries considered more secure. Meanwhile, the private jet market has not been nearly as badly hit as the commercial airline industry. Private aviation started picking up towards the middle of the year, attracting new types of customers seeking to reduce the number of touchpoints that could be contaminated with the virus. In the process of adjusting to this new normal, the wealthy’s preferences and demands are altering in ways that will influence on the luxury industry for many years to come.”

Wealth-X has identified three key preference changes in the way the affluent are spending their wealth.

Digital shopping for luxury goods has grown beyond expectations as the affluent have become more accustomed to this medium. Reports show that luxury providers are not only expanding but enhancing their digital footprint and its felt that this trend is likely to continue.

The pandemic has prompted the wealthy to ensure that their family are safe and healthy – as such there has been an upsurge in the purchase of intangible assets. This demand includes a ‘wellness’ aspect as the affluent have recognized the need for a healthy balance that supports their holistic well-being as well ‘safety’ requirement for their family.

Finally, there has been an increase of private luxury, with many services being delivered to ensure that these wealthy are able enjoy them at home or on their estates.

The changing face of the real estate industry now fully recognizes the importance of including amenities that address the physical, social, and mental/emotional/spiritual dimensions of its residents.
